

BATTEL FORCE 2003

What if Kaiju Big Battle had Figures?

Anyone who thinks wrestling is fake hasn't seen Kaiju Big Battle. Sure, it's easy to fake a punch in the mouth, but how do you fake kicking a giant can of soup through a cardboard building? The answer is, you can't. That's why Kaiju Big Battle (misspelling intentional) is one of the most "real" wrestling leagues around. You may have seen their giant kaiju (Japanese for "monsters," but actually just guys in foam suits) on The Jimmy Kimmel Show, on their Website (www.kaiju.com) or in small venues around their Boston hometown, but there's one place you haven't seen them: the toy aisles. We went to the wrestlers themselves to find out what the Kaiju toy line would be like.

DR. CUBE Kaiju's iconic mad scientist, Dr. Cube is responsible for creating some of the worst monsters in Kaiju history. The bad doctor tells us that his figure would come with an "SDS-1 remote control for my Super-Dimensional Slug and my Danger Scalpel with the extra-long bloody blade." The figure would be able to perform "the Troublesome Malpractice stance and the Danger Scalpel Slice."

SILVER POTATO The foil-wrapped hero of Kaiju, Potato says he would come with "a boombox circa 1985, turntables with dope hip-hop record collection and a piece of cardboard for impromptu breakdance battles." And, of course, he would have "unlimited points of articulation for all the b-boy stalls."

UCHU CHU The big bad space bug replied, saying he "ain't got no time for toys." Just for that, he gets no accessories or action feature. Nyah.

HELL MONKEY Dr. Cube's satanic but cuddly minion insists his figure would come with "a bottle of Hell Monkey Hot Sauce and two 40-ounce bottles of Night Train malt liquor with brown bag covers." Naturally, Hell Monkey wouldn't be complete without "flame-shooting mouth-sparking action."

KUNG FU CHICKEN NOODLE The murderous soup-gone-bad told us that his action figure would come with "a blood-stained meat cleaver, throwing chicken stars and a giant toothpick," the latter of which he used to kill rival Club Sandwich. The action feature possibilities are limited for a can of soup, but Noodle suggests "super can steamroller wind-up action."

LOS PLANTANOS The South American tag-team favorites (don't you dare call them bananas) say they would come with "changeable pants, from guerrilla warfare camouflage to beach 'jams,' and a giant shaker of salt for margaritas and killing Cube's Super Dimensional Slug." Additionally, Pedro and Pablo's figures would be able to "combine our powers to perform our famous double-team move, The Cuban Hurricane." ■ Justin Acclin

UNMASKED

CUSTOM
DR. CUBE
BY SCOTT
KLAUDER

Battel Force 2003

by Justin Aclin

ToyFare, May, 2003

Anyone who thinks wrestling is fake hasn't seen Kaiju Big Battel. Sure, it's easy to fake a punch to the mouth, but how do you fake kicking a giant can of soup through a cardboard building? The answer is, you can't. That's why Kaiju Big Battel (misspelling intentional) is one of the most "real" wrestling leagues around. You may have seen their giant kaiju (Japanese for "monsters," but actually just guys in foam suits) on The Jimmy Kimmel Show, on their Website (www.kaiju.com) or in small venues around their Boston hometown, but there's one place you haven't seen them: the toy aisles. We went to the wrestlers themselves to find out what the Kaiju toy line would be like.

DR. CUBE Kaiju's iconic mad scientist, Dr. Cube is responsible for creating some of the worst monsters in Kaiju history. The bad doctor tells us that his figure would come with an "SDS-1 remote control for my Super-Dimensional Slug and my Danger Scalpel with extra-long bloody blade." The figure would be able to perform "the Troublesome Malpractice stance and the Danger Scalpel Slice."

SILVER POTATO The foil-wrapped hero of Kaiju says he would come with "a boombox circa 1985, turntables with dope hip-hop record collection and a piece of cardboard for impromptu breakdance battles." And, of course, he would have "unlimited points of articulation for all the b-boy stalls."

UCHU CHU The big bad space bug replied that he "ain't got no time for toys." Just for that, he gets no accessories or action figure. Nyah.

HELL MONKEY Dr. Cube's satanic but cuddly minion insists his figure would come with "a bottle of Hell Monkey Hot Sauce and two 40-ounce bottles of Night Train malt liquor with brown bag covers." Naturally, Hell Monkey wouldn't be complete without "flame shooting mouth sparking action."

KUNG FU CHICKEN NOODLE The murderous soup-gone-bad told us his figure would come with "a blood stained meat cleaver, throwing chicken stars and a giant toothpick," the latter of which he used to kill rival Club Sandwich. The action feature possibilities are limited for a can of soup, but Noodle suggests "super can steamroller windup action."

LOS PLANTANOS The South American tag-team favorites (don't you dare call them bananas) say they would come with "changeable parts, from guerilla warfare camouflage to beach 'jams,' and a giant shaker of salt for margaritas and killing Cube's Super Dimensional Slug." Additionally, Pedro and Pablo's figures would be able to "combine our powers to perform our famous double-team move, the Cuban Hurricane."